Memories Fill the Treasure Chest

Now that the events of this year have been pushed away--out of sight, out of mind--an attempt to recall them often proves quite unproductive. The many activities each individual tries to remember become a blur of who, what, when, and where. Thus the annual is awarded the assignment of active memory for the forgetful student.

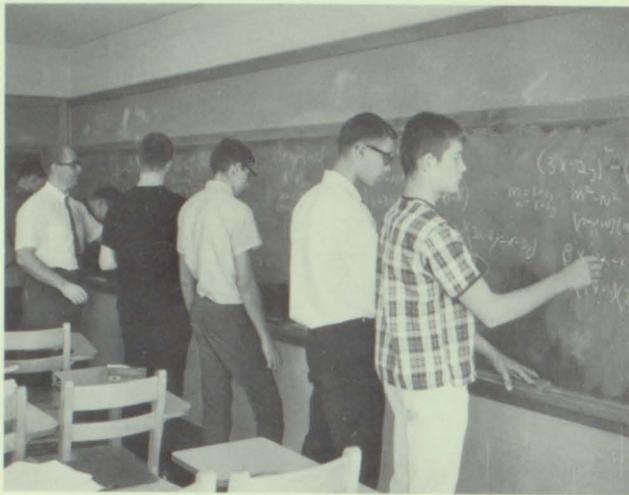

Ask any average group of children what the annual is. The entire cluster will confidently reply, "It's a book full of pictures." But their definition is not quite complete. We consider this 1966 Oak Leaves more than a "picture book." It is, and should be, a recounting of memories for each pupil who has taken part in the workings of the past school year.

These children will realize someday that these pictures in the annual are more than mere snapshots. These photos mature into golden memories of "school days" and each becomes a treasure worthy of acclaim.

For many people the most unimportant part of the yearbook is the academic section, but look back with me for a moment. Didn't you spend most of your time in class; wasn't that why you came to school in the first place, to learn. All those teachers, tests, trying times, and yes, the memories too are recorded here forever. Somehow those lost sounds of laughter and tears, the good and bad are now just memories.

Reorganization and consolidation have brought

Mr. Robert Absher has become to us the prime illustration of a young, progressive principal, hand-picked by a fine educational system. He must distribute his time among faculty, administration, and student body problems yet salvage leisure moments for family life. A principal realizes that he has not accepted an easy occupation soon after he takes his position as head man. He is involved in many sensitive situations and must be extremely careful not to tread on any tender feelings. Even though he often receives no thanks for smoothing out these problems we feel mere thanks and gratitude cannot even dent the feeling of great appreciation our Mr. Absher deserves.

Good. (And congratulations. If you substituted the right letters for their corresponding numbers, you've just solved another one.) That's the way curiosity works. If you have it, you just can't leave a problem alone until it's solved.

We know. Lots of us are the same way. Like you, we're curious about things. We ask questions. And we hunt for answers. Maybe that's why we're in a problem-solving business.

You might enjoy some of the things we're doing at our new Engineering and Research facility in Anderson. If we want to see what something really looks like, we pop it under our electron microscope and magnify it up to 200,000 diameters. (For example, we can magnify the diameter of a human hair to a width of 50 feet.) If we want to analyze materials for their metallic elements, we use our spectrograph. It's accurate down to a few parts per million. And these are only two of the many instruments we use to find answers to our questions.

Scientists, engineers, technicians . . . we all work together. And when we're done, we've got an electronic ignition system for cars. Or a control device for missiles. Or a new kind of generator. Then on to the next problem.

Sound like something to look into? It is. If you did well in your high school science courses, maybe you'd enjoy a career in research. Of course, it's no snap getting there. You've got lots of study and hard work ahead of you. But after college, if you still like to solve problems, stop by. We'll save a couple for you.
